Powell reduces monetary policy concerns

SUMMARY

- US equities rally strongly. The S&P500 index rose 2.3% overnight with the technology and consumer discretionary sectors up over 3%. Market expectations of US rate hike in 2019 have fallen. The USD weakened slightly in response.
- Powell signals more balanced outlook. US Fed chair Powell indicated the Fed Funds rate is just below where monetary policy is 'neutral', boosting hopes that rate hikes may pause in 2019.
- A positive for risk assets, not just in the US. Powell's comments should be positive for equity markets around the globe as the reduction in global liquidity has been a major concern.

BACKGROUND

- Significant change in the Fed chair's stance. In October, Powell suggested interest rates were probably a long way from the 'neutral' rate – the level at which policy is neither stimulating not restraining economic activity. The inference from this view was, absent a significant slowdown in the economy, the Fed would continue to hike interest rates significantly in the coming months.
- Rising possibility of a pause in interest rate hikes. Powell is now saying we are close to this 'neutral' rate, which hints at a more measured approach to monetary policy in the coming months. Interest rate hikes have been seemingly programmatic in recent times, with the Fed hiking once every quarter. Even before Powell's comments, markets had been reducing their outlook for interest rates hikes in 2019. Powell's comments have reaffirmed the belief that the Fed will slow the pace of rate hikes next year.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN FOR INVESTORS?

- Slowing pace of tightening a positive for risk assets. 2018 has been a challenging year for investors, with most areas of equities and bonds in negative territory year-to-date. The reduction in global liquidity has been a major concern, particularly for Emerging Markets, as it has been accompanied by a stronger USD and portfolio outflows. There has also been a rising fear that the Fed would tighten policy too much, resulting in a US recession. Powell's comments are likely to reduce these concerns.
- Equities set to rally. This is clearly a positive for US equities. Also, given cheap valuations and their oversold nature, we have been arguing that a short-term rally for Asia ex-Japan equities is likely. Powell's comments reinforce this view. If the USD index breaks below 96.50, this would also be a significant positive for EM assets.

WHAT NEXT?

- Powell speech, trade talks, key technical levels. Powell speaks again tonight. If markets have misinterpreted his comments, this would be an opportunity to set the record straight. US-China trade talks over the weekend are also key. The S&P 500 index faces technical resistance at 2815 (around 2.6% above current levels). A break above here would suggest 2940 as a target (+7%). For Asia ex-Japan equities, a break higher today looks likely, which would potentially open up scope for 8% gains.
