

Pakistan Market Outlook 2021

Will growth return in 2021?

Macro landscape has changed greatly due to COVID-19, but thanks to Government support & initiatives last year that economic activity has remained largely on track if not very good. 2021 is likely to be a better year for Pakistan as GDP growth is expected to return into positive territory.

Global pandemic was not truly a black swan event for Pakistan's equity market as index gained 7% in 2020. While we doubt that 2021 will be a smooth year for the economy and equity market, we see positive developments on most economic fronts which should be positive for the riskier assets.

State Bank's moderate policy decisions likely to be a pillar of support for the economy, In this scenario we prefer shorter tenor bonds & sukuk. On the FX side robust remittances may continue to support the PKR.

Investment strategy

IMPLICATIONS FOR INVESTORS

- GDP growth is expected to turn positive in FY21 compared to a contraction of 0.4% in FY20, as effects of Pandemic diminish
- World Bank and IMF are likely to offer support and flexibility in implementation of economic reforms until economic recovery gets on track
- We are overweight on equities and expect Multi-asset strategies with calculated allocation in equities to outperform government bonds over a 12-month horizon
- PKR likely to remain stable in the near term against the USD

Anticipating a post-COVID-19 world

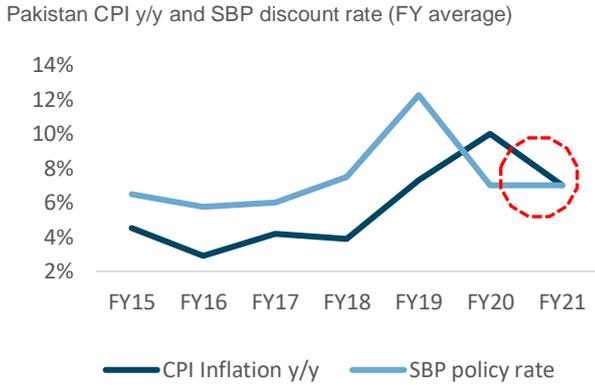

- The rapid development of COVID-19 vaccines suggest that global economy will likely take the road to recovery this year. In this case upside in Pakistan's GDP growth looks possible in FY21 but it will possibly remain below historical average.
- We believe State Bank will shift from soft to moderate policy stance and in case of high inflation a rate hike can come sooner than expected.
- PKR to remain stable in the near term, however the local rupee may come under pressure by the end of first half as external account remains vulnerable.
- KSE100 Index has gained 7% in 2020 due to ease in lockdowns across the country, stimulus provided by the government and aggressive rate cuts by the State Bank. We believe improving macro indicators, earnings growth and positive developments on the IMF and FATF fronts will be key triggers for the local bourse in 2021. Nevertheless, we caution that gains are unlikely to occur in a straight line.

Macro overview: the silver lining

The pandemic last year has pushed the global and Pakistan's local economy in deepest recession in decades. Despite local governments efforts to counter the downturn by providing fiscal and monetary policy support, the pandemic is still expected to leave lasting scars on the economy.

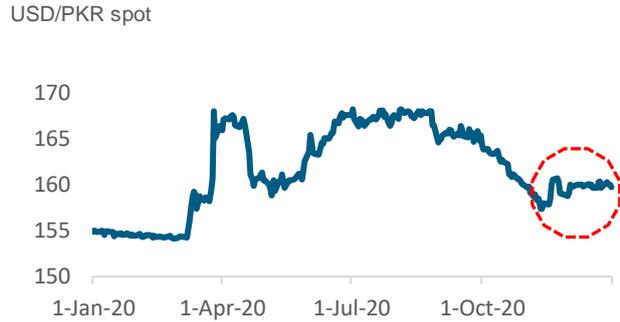

However, we believe that Pakistan's economic growth will likely rebound in FY21 as swift launch of COVID-19 vaccines globally in Q1 would mean restrictions on economic and social activity can be relaxed. The ensuing gradual return to normalcy, against the backdrop of unprecedented monetary and fiscal stimulus, and elevated local demand, is likely to revive economic activity, job market and consumption. We expect the authorities to prioritise uptick in economic activities and growth by opting accommodative policies which will help to reduce business uncertainties and revive foreign and local investments. Delayed roll out of vaccines or tightening of fiscal and monetary policy too soon are they key risks to the view.

PKR Bonds- real yields unattractive but continue to act as a safe haven to economic shocks

Last year in response to the pandemic Central Bank’s aggressive action to cut the policy rate by 625bps has resulted in relatively unattractive yields, however bonds have continued to offer uninterrupted cashflow in these unprecedented times.

Going forward in 2021 as Pakistan economy accelerates on the road to recovery, we may witness slightly higher inflation as local demand picks up and some pressure on the fiscal side which are likely to drive yields higher. In that case we expect the Central Bank to increase the policy rate modestly, so it does not hamper growth hence we prefer short to medium term Pakistan Investment Bonds (PIBs). For now, shorter tenor bonds offer unattractive real yields (yields net of inflation) but are ideal from interest rate risk perspective on a 12-month horizon.

PK Equities witnessed once in a century pandemic and a substantial recovery within it

Lower bond yields, government stimulus and attractive valuations have supported the investor sentiment at the local bourse throughout 2020.

As we move forward, we expect the current bullish trend to continue in 2021, however gains are unlikely to occur in a straight line. Pakistan’s equity market continues to trade at a deep discount vs. MSCI emerging market Asia, we believe recovery in corporate earnings boosted by government subsidies, vaccine roll out and economic reopening will be the key drivers for the local bourse in 2021.

We are cautiously overweight on equities as current macroeconomic indicators like large scale manufacturing, current account surplus, low interest rates and expectations of gradual normalisation of international trade will likely provide a potential upside to the local equities. Meanwhile high interest rates, over shooting bond yields, political uncertainty and a rapid rise in COVID-19 cases would be a risk.

PKR limited hope for further strength

Robust inflow of remittances from the Pakistani diaspora, low imports due to the lock down, slight recovery in exports and deferred debt payments have provided some support to Pakistan’s balance of payment and the PKR subsequently.

Going forward we expect the PKR strength to lose steam due to rise in imports as economy reopens, household incomes recover, and consumption increases followed by debt servicing pressures. While we anticipate the positive remittance trend to continue, Pakistan will likely rely on government initiatives like Roshan digital account, IMF and bilateral partners to maintain adequate FX reserves in FY21.
