Potential risks of Hedge Funds

Hedge funds differ from traditional unit trusts / funds in that they can undertake more risky investment strategies than traditional fund managers e.g. they may borrow to invest which can magnify potential losses.

Potential risks of Derivatives

A derivative is a financial contract whose value depends on, or is derived from assets, liabilities or indices and includes a wide assortment of financial instruments such as forwards, futures, options, warrants and swaps. Derivatives are typically used to manage a unit trust / fund's risk, however, derivatives may also be used as part of a unit trust / fund's overall investment strategy.

Unit trusts / funds which invest in derivatives may have higher volatility. An investment in derivatives may result in losses that are greater than the principal amount invested. Derivatives are also subject to a number of risks including but not limited to liquidity, interest rate, market, counterparty and credit risk. You should not invest in a unit trust / fund that invests in or contains derivatives unless you understand the nature of derivative investments and the extent of your risk exposure. You must satisfy yourself that a unit trust / fund which invests in or contains derivative instruments is suitable for you in light of your circumstances and financial resources.
